Chapter Four:

The chapter addresses the National Employment Strategy as one of the fundamental pillars for achieving inclusive economic growth, through productivity enhancement and expanding the base of decent job opportunities, particularly among youth and women. It focuses on the strategic orientation towards channeling public investment into the education, health, and technical education sectors, with the aim of building an integrated skills system that responds to the needs of a productive economy. The chapter also highlights the importance of aligning education outcomes with labor market requirements by developing technical and vocational skills and improving the quality of vocational training. These efforts are intended to address labor market imbalances, increase employment rates, and promote greater integration into the formal economy

Within the same framework, the chapter emphasizes the importance of supporting entrepreneurship and innovation through the reform of legislative and regulatory frameworks, improved access to finance, and the development of targeted incentives for emerging sectors. These measures aim to enhance labor market dynamism and generate new growth opportunities.
